

Eric is a PhD student at Ohio University working cross-departmentally in Biological and Geological Sciences, as well as being the Lab Coordinator for the O'Connor Lab in the department of Biomedical Sciences. His research interests include the paleobiogeography and paleoecology of Late Cretaceous dinosaurs, with specific interest in the functional morphology, paleoecology and evolutionary history of ceratopsian dinosaurs. He received his MS and BS degrees from the University of Utah.

